Developing countries which are also small islands survive on the front line of our battle for a better future. They exemplify our changing view of the environment, and are often pioneers in the search for sustainable improvements to our way of life.

This video focuses on three very different island countries, Western Samoa, Barbados and the Maldives, and examines what problems they share with more than forty other small island developing states. We explore their efforts to build fresh possibilities in sustainable development, as they confront the critical challenges presented by natural and man-made disasters, fluctuating weather conditions, pollution, waste disposal problems, and limited water supplies.

Written by: Steve Whitehouse
Ingrid Kasper
Producer: Ingrid Kasper
Editor: Enzo Bartoccioli
Narrator: Lelei Lelaulu
Executive Producer Steve Whitehouse
Release date: December 1994
(c) United Nations 1994